Biography

Abby is a member of Parsons Behle & Latimer's environmental and natural resources team and the firm's water law and real estate practice groups. She has more than a decade of experience representing a diverse range of water users, from small individual family farms to large irrigation districts, in water law and real property matters. Abby holds an L.L.M. in Water and Environmental Law from McGeorge School of Law, where she focused on contemporary water law and environmental issues facing the greater Intermountain West region.

In her water law practice, Abby represents water users through all stages of water rights adjudication proceedings in the Montana Water Court, water rights distribution and enforcement conflicts in state district courts and administrative permitting in state agencies.

Abby also concentrates her practice on real estate transactions, including water rights and real property due diligence investigations. Abby has particular experience with large-scale ranch transactions.

Experience

Montana Water Adjudication Representation

Represents dozens of water rights owners located throughout Montana in most hydrological basins subject to ongoing adjudication by the Montana Water Court against claims of abandonment, non-perfection and challenges to every possible element of a water right. Clients include individual farmers, family ranches, corporations, irrigation districts and water supply companies.
