Biography

With a diverse and robust practice, Jason represents a wide range of clients across several legal disciplines.

Litigation

Jason commonly litigates for clients in cases related to his extensive practice, including construction disputes, contract claims, foreclosures, boundary disputes, condemnation, business fraud, agency review actions, unlawful employment claims, property tax exemptions before U.S. District Courts and the State of Idaho and has appeared on several appeals before the Idaho Supreme Court. He is also experienced representing clients before federal and state agencies.

Real Estate

Jason represents buyers, sellers and lenders in large and small real estate transactions, and, when necessary, litigates for all clients to protect their real property interests. He also assists clients with land use and entitlement issues and represents clients before planning and zoning commissions. Clients include national banks and corporations, investors, co-operatives, contractors and developers, business owners and individuals.

Environmental & Natural Resources

Focusing mainly on clients' property interests and mineral rights, Jason represents mining companies of all sizes. He has advised many companies on the vesting of mineral interests across the Mountain West and assists in larger mining financing transactions.

For 10 years prior to attending law school, Jason worked for a preeminent title insurance company in Southwest Colorado.
